

The lift shaft of the Elysian Tower has been growing at a rate of roughly one floor per day, but while the building will be Ireland's tallest when it is built, that title may only last until the development of the Dublin docklands.

car-park, including 553 parking spaces, has already taken place.

The Elysian will be taller than Dublin's Liberty Hall when finished, but its status as Ireland's highest building is expected to be short-lived as it will probably be surpassed by skyscraper development in the Dublin docklands.